Title:

Microstructure of the First Organized Futures Market: The Dojima Security Exchange from 1730 to 1869

This book is the first comprehensive account of the rules and practices—the microstructure—of the Dojima Security Exchange (DSE), the world’s first futures market. Despite worldwide interest in the DSE and its relevance to modern financial markets, it is only briefly touched upon as the earliest example of a futures market in most of the existing literature in English. Until the publication of this book, there has been no comprehensive account in English of the rules and practices of the DSE.
